Now, Mr. President, I will read a short extract ATE OF THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. President, I pass to another topic. The Senator from Massachusetts [air. Sumner] chose to introduce the subject of slavery into his argument. I regret that he thought it necessary to do se; and upon that point he, and not I, is the judge. Sir, in this henr of our country's great need, when she wants and requires every true. Unite all their energies and all their forces to save for from dissolution, I had hoped that when the Congress of the United States got together, in this awful moment, at least, the voice of party and of faction would be hished; that no tepic calculated to produce division among the friends of the Government and the Union and the conntry would be introduced into either House of Congress, if it could be passibly avoided. I had heped, at any rate, that the raven cry of slavery, during this travail of the Government, would not be beard in either House of Congress. Sir, if that hed been the course pursued here, what a spectacle the Congress of the United States of America would then have exhibited to the world! Oh! that the gautheman from Massachusetts, is tead of fanning the flame, and introducing here from day to day petitions to usurp an unconstitutionel power for the purpose of manumitting the slaves, had written to these inon who thus addressed him and urgad him on, and said, "Peace for the present; let this prestion, and eliother questions of difference and discord among Union nion sleep; we have enough to do to put down the common foe, the great insurgent government; let us unite without any diversity of counsel or of purpose in this great and holy cause; and when that is disposed of effectually, and for-enument are all pace, then if you choose to address me on the subject of slavery, cond forward your putitions."

I do not make these remarks for the purpose of censure or condemnation. I only make them for "Slave'v was abolished to Colombia first by the Spaci h general, Murillo" Mu i lo it is colled here; but I believe his name I shoul t doubt whe har instructions were given it does not appear that that eminent man the cample of General to the cample of General

I do not make these remarks for the purpose of eensure or condennation. I only make thom for the purposa of expressing the re-son of my own head and the feelings of my own heart in relation to this matter. The Senster essumed the broad position that slavery was the cause of this rebellion. I said yesterday, as I say to-day, in my humble judgment it wee one of the remote cause; it was not the greatest of the remote cause; it was not the greatest of the remote cause; it was not the immediate or exciting cause at all; and will make a very few remarks, hearing, as I laink, upon that proposition, and establishing its truth.

I said yesterday that no slave owner had any cause to complain of the legislation of Congress. Thara may be a softary messure high which there might be a difference of opinion, but that measure passed upwards of forty years ago, and was called the binscuri conjuromise. Whet was the section of the party from the free States upon that memorable occasion? It was this that measure passed upwards of forty years ago, and was called the binscuri conjuromise. ing up South America with her axamples and r practices and her Governmente that are ecarce-deserving of the name, where government and their application on this question, to some extent, incidentally, upon all the great, grave, and vital questi insthat now enlist the hearts and the reason of the people of America, and are of incalculable importance. I elated that the Government of the United States was one of delegated and limited powers; that neither the Congrest, nor the Piesident, nor that judiciary department have a right to exercise any power that is not specifically and by letter delegated to the particular department by the Constitution, or that does not arise as a nocessary and proper incidental power in carrying into effect and operation one of the sample of one of these Governments to sustain at least did not advert, to one great, controlling, omnipotent power in the premises; and that is this: the United States of Amarica have a written stitution, and that Constitution is the surreme steps with thus eatelliles in their respective other power than that prescribed by the instru-ment itself for its alteration and modification, than the archanged who fell from heaven to the dewest hell can change the sublime and incomrebensible laws that regulate the music of the phares.

The Constitution commerates definitely and epo-phically the principal powers of Congress; and it prescribes great and important limitations upon those powers. It prescribes limitations and repir's in a non the powers of the State Legisla-turas, and noon that much-abused idea, the cov-reignly of the States thameelves. It withholds and forever forbid? the exercise of certain powore, either by the General or State Governments, and reserves them inalienable to the people of America. This Constitution divides the power of America. This Construction divides its jowed of Government into three departments. It blands some if the departments. The President is partly executive; be in partly legislative; and in him and the Senate is invested the power to make troaties; hat, sir. where, in the enumeration of powers by this Constitution, is the war-making power vestage. It has Congress of the Linited States. ed? In the Congress of the United States. Where it it vested in the monerchies, and especially the desponsions of Europe? In their monarchs, their emporers and their kings. They make wer and they make treaties at pleasure; but this stupendons power of making war and commanding the whole physical force of the nation, and all of its means of men and money, and setting them up n battle array against a Power of the certh, our forefathers were too wise end too experienced to vest in the President of the United States, and they vested it expresely in Congress. What else is done in relation to the war-mak-

they vested it expressly in Congress.

What else is done in relation to the war-making powerly the Constitution? The President of the United States is constituted the Commander in Chief. He is the generalissimo, if I may use the term. When the forces are in the field he takes command of them as the chief, and overy general exercises his power and authority subordinate to him. But this generalissimo, this President of the United States, in not trusted with the war-making power, or the power to raise ermies, to equip fleets, and to raise the ways and means for the purpose of supporting armice and fleets. These great and stupendant powers heing vosted in thongress, the President of the United States himself is not the war-making power, that is subordinate to and subject to the power of Congress, as the clief war-making power. If Congress chooses to pass tawe regulating the war, the objects and purposes for which it shall he waged, and in many other important respects giving direction to the President, he would be bound to subordinate himself to the principal war-making power, and to cley it; and if he did not he would subject himself properly to impeachment.

It then defines that the crime of treason is unsking war egainst the United States by an overt set or alberiag to their enemies, according to the sense of the etatate of 21 Edward III, and giving eid and comfort to their enemies. Now, lask the horerable gentleman from Massachnetts, under this war making power, under the law murtial as exercised or as it can be exercised, by a general in time of war, can your iteu'enaul general, or your mior general or tien enail general, or your m jer general, or your brigadier general, or your brigadier general, or your class, where he is the highest in commandia a mild re district—and such is the case in some of the military districts of the United States at this time—can they axcents it. He declares that he is oppised to any such thing, because it is a measure of correin, if I understand him; and yet says this learned commentator, and so says every min, in my judgment, who has any just and true ldas of government, the Government would not have been thought worthy of creation, and it would have been wholly incapable of preservation, with-out such a provision. "II the power had not be a expressly granted, it ast have been in plied"-

Without any proclamation, without any instruction from the President, just by the act of the appointment of a military commander to a military district, the factor to use a phrase that has been used to the Senita Chamber, and is a very proper one, according to 31r. Adams, the haws of war apply. I will read still further from the same speech, and then I will commont a little upon the position assumed in it:

"I might formide a thousand proofe to show that the professions of gentlemen to the sandthy of their municipal Institutione, under a state of schial Invasion and of actual war, whether service, rivil, nor foreign, is of actual war, whether service, rivil, nor foreign, is of actual war, whether service, rivil, nor foreign, is of actual war, whether service, rivil, nor foreign, is of actual war, whether service, rivil, nor foreign, is of actual war, whether service, rivil, nor foreign, is of actual war, whether service, rivil, nor foreign, is of actual war, whether service, rivil, nor foreign, is of actual war, whether service, rivil, nor foreign, is of actual war, whether service, rivil, nor foreign, is of actual war, whether service, rivil, nor foreign, is Constitution upon the subject.

Mr. President, there is another thought in connection with the proposition to emancipate the elever, that I will express. The Constitution guarantees to every civizen certain great liber is and rights. Among them is the right to worship, they are continue to the distance of his connection. God according to the dictates of his own con-cionce, the feedom of speech, the liberty of the press, the right of trial by jury, and various other important and most essential rights and tiporties that are councrated in the Constitution. I ask the gentlemen from Massachusetts if all these rights secured by the Constitution, their from it Why? Beceuse the Constitution had created Congress the evential war-making power of this government, and it chose to confide to the wer-making power alone the power to suspend the west of hubeos corpus, which gives effect to martial law.

Now, Mr. President, let us see what this law martial, this military law is. There are three or four classes of military law. One class consists of the articles of war, enacted in Eagland by an "unless the articles of war established under the retained inerthemed, to counider das of that character."

You may examine all the autho, ities that trea on martial law, and they establish this general proposition that martial law is nothing but the will of the commanding general; that, in the lauguage of Mr. Adams, "it aweeps by the board all other laws." Now let me put this case to the Senate; I would put it to the honorable gentleman from Massachusetts, but I will put it to the Son-ati: suppose that Beanregard and his bordes or the other side of the river had reached the south bank of the l'otomac and were beleaguering the bank of the Potomac and were beleaguering file city, and that the President of the United States should procleim martial lew, would that sweep Congress by the board? Would it sweep by the board the Supreme Court of the United States that are now holding their august esssions, in which justice and learning are so signally dis-played, in the chamber near us, formerly occu-

me ack Senators, does this law martiel. Let me ask Sonators, does this law martiel, which it is proclaimed may be spoken into being by any commander of a military district, eweep ewey all constitutions in the United States, including the Federal Constitution, and all the laws of the States, and still the laws of the states, and still it would not prove his position, nor authorize his conclusion, nor justify the sciling which he proposes. Let me illustrate it he scilin which he proposes. Let me illustrate it in this way: this arbitrary will of the military chiefserved In env decisions; it is the will of the commanding general fir the time, wheever he may be; acd as much as the opinion of different generals may vary, so does this law vary. It has no mifermity, it has no record. It has no enactment. It has no recognition by decision. It has no reported cases to guide those who come after, and forcemulate the conduct of the citizen and end in regulate the conduct of the citizen and advise him what to avoid end what he may pracadvise him what to avoid end what he may prac-tice. It is no lamp to his path, no guide to his feet. It teaches him nothing. It gives him no mo-lition. It is more monstrous and strocious than the laws of Draco, that were written in hloody provisions in small writing, and placed so high on the walls of Athens that they could not be read. upon the will of any man who happens to be the commender of a military department for its par-particuler form and principles, if it is to have any form and principles, verying as the commanders are numerous and as they differ in policy with relation to the conduct of the war.

Now, I ask the gentleman from Massachusetts—I put this rolemn question to my friands unund me, Republicans as they are, who command my friendsbip and my esteem—is it possible that all the organization of the Constitution of the mand my friendship and my esteem—is it possible. Hast all libe organism of the Coustivation of the United States, with its great principles of right and liberty, with its simple and mejestic machinery for carrying out the powers of the thing the system crumbles into ruin and becomes as the very dust the moment there is a military district extablished and a closed carries an army of the private? Can Congress or a general take private preperty capiclously? Can they take it for no purpose? Can they take it without appropriating it to any use? No. sir. They can only take it for public use, and then must make just compensation for it. What is peblic use? That is a phrase of material lumort and it must be inquired. phrase of material Import, and it must be inquired unto and understood before this provision can receive a fair construction. What is taking private property for public us? It is for some operation of the Govornment, for some business of the Government, for some necessity of the Government. The anthorities of the United States cannot take The authorities of the Coiled States cannot take property to throw it away. They cannot leke it to give it to an individual or to a foreign country. They can take it only for one purpose, and that purpose is the public use. What is public use? It is an operation of the Government; it is some of the necessary lusiness of the Government, some transaction in which the Government he concrued as a party, and to which the property is proper and necessary. All these constituents must concur to give Congress power to take pri-point: how long does that martial law prevai? How long do its effects continur? Even in Eng-land it could not be proclaimed in time of peace. The courts of England decided that martial law n time of peace was against Magna Charta, and old; and they punished as murderers military flicers who had executed men under martial lew onters who had executed men under martial lew in time of peace. I suppose the gentleman will concide that, if martial law ran prevail at all in this country, it can prevail only in time of war. Then how long does it continue? How long do its effects continue? How long do its consequences continue? Only during the existence of the war. There is no law but the will of the the war. There is no law but the will of the commander in time of war, when martlal law prevails—thut is the universal principle, the unbroken propesition of the authorities. Well, what may a general de? I chanced to be a member of the other House when the joint resolution usurping the treaty-making power was introduced in the House of Representatives, to admit Texas as a State into the Union. A treaty had been negotiated to the effect a few weeks before by Mr. Calhonn, as Suctionary of State for Mr. The The Democratic itself to irongurate and consummata a revolu-tion. No. Mr. Precident, let Congress do its duty in this war faithfully, fearlessly. The peo-

The Democratic pirty, though they wanted to use Tyler to sub-vert and overthrow the party which placed him pirty, though they wanted to use Tyler to subvert and ovarthrow the party which placed him in power, never intended to nieke him fheir chief, and to confide power in him themselves. They determined that he and his edulnistration should never have the Jeffersonian glory and fame of hiving added such a province as Texas to the United States of America.

They therefore voted down that treaty; they would not ellow it to get a two-third vote in the Sonate, which was requisite. In a few weeks afterwards, a joint resolution edultting Texas, a foreign territory, into the Union, was intreduced. Isay that no constitution was ever more palpably and flagith-usly violated than was the Conetitution of the United States by the introduction and passage of that resolution. It is preposterous and abourd to say that Congress, the legislative in this war faithfully, fearlessly. The post of the imporilled capital and government as ne people ever came and before. Yea, from the sast to the west, especially in the free Stafes, they are as non-men. Kentucky has been invaded. repel the invasion. It is a historical and a goographical fact, as demonstrable as such facts can be, that Corpas Christi naver hed been any part of Texas mail it was usurped effect the bittle of San Jacinte; this when Texas was one of the Maxican States, and one of the Spanish provinces, it had naver been any part of Texas. What did Congress do? If recignized the war. I veted against the war, and I denoured the position of the President that American blood had been shed upon American soil as a falsehood; and I think that I made upon the cubject in the House of Representatives.

What then took place? As a continuation of that line of policy, I say, came the war with Maxico. I voted against recognizing that war. I voted ngainst it not only for the reason I have stated, but for another reason. I knew that the result of the war would be the acquisition of more territory; and that whenever we git more territory; and that whenever we git more territory; this apple of descret, this perpetual, this content of the property and energing the descret. territory; and that whenever wo get more territory, this apple of decord, this perpetual, this coarsed question of negro slavery would again be thrown late divide and to distract the people.

I filten went out of Congress, and now have returned. If I had been present in 1821 I might have voted against the Missouri compromise; it is probable I should have done as; but after it had been passed, and had given peace and quiet to the land for a generation. I was uttoily opposed to its disturbance; and if I had been a member of either House of Congress in 1834 I should have noted and I should have accorded weather. I have been it should have noted and all about have accorded weather. of either House of Coogress in 1854 I should have voted, and I should have exerted myself, to preserve ibst compromise inviolate. When Kansas was sought to be admitted, and the Lecompton Constitution was pressed upon Congress for adoption, I investigated the subject, and I admitted and believed and eaid publicly and boldly that it was a most outrageous and palpabla fraud; and if I had been here in 1858 I should have voted against the admitselon of Kansas under the Lecompton Constitution.
